1946 Viet Minh Overprints, Japan Occupation of Indochina

Figure 1 is a mint group of Viet Minh North Vietnam locals (without gum as issued). These were stamps issued by the Japan occupation government in French Indochine during WWII. They were overprinted by the Viet Minh communist insurgents.

The group includes the yellow Olympic salute stamp of 1944. Most Olympics collectors include this stamp in their collection as one of the only Olympics stamps issued in 1944, the year a second Olympics games had to be cancelled due to WWII. This group also includes a MNH pair of surcharged French Indochina from before WWII.

The Viet Minh, the Viet Nam Doc Lap Dong Minh [League for the Independence of Vietnam], was a coalition of Communist and nationalist groups that opposed the French and the Japanese during World War II. The Viet Minh spearheaded Vietnamese resistance to French rule in the French Indochina War (1946-54). The organization was soon dominated by Communists, and in 1951 its Communist elements were absorbed by the Communist party of North Vietnam. French Indochina comprised the French colony of Cochin China and the French protectorates of Tonkin, Annam, Laos, and Cambodia (Cochin China, Tonkin, and Annam were later united to form Vietnam).

The capital was Hanoi. The federation formed the easternmost region of the Indochinese peninsula (which it shared with Myanmar, Thailand, and Malaya) and faced East on the South China Sea.

The cultures of Indochina were influenced by China and India. The centuries before European intervention saw the growth and decline of the Khmer Empire in Cambodia, the rise and fall of Champa, and the steady expansion of Annam. European penetration began in the 16th century.. In the 19th-century in a race for a colonial empire, the French took (1862, 1867) Cochin China as a colony and gained protectorates over Cambodia (1863), Annam (1884), and Tonkin (1884). In 1887 they formed those four states into a union of Indochina, with a governor-general at its head; Laos was added to the union in 1893. In World War II, France was forced to accept Japanese intervention in N Indochina in 1940; the subsequent Japanese move into South Indochina (July, 1941) was viewed by the United States as a threat to the Philippines; it prompted the freezing of all Japanese assets in the United States and precipitated the diplomatic exchanges cut short by the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

A POSTMARK MYSTERY

T04 through T06

This postmark is very scarce on stamps, uncommon on postal stationery, and very rare or none existent on cover.

Literature: In The Encyclopedia of British Empire Postage Stamps, Volume 1, it is illustrated along with the comment: "Traveling Post Office?" Explanations for this Postmark have been handled conservatively by specialists, each proposing a theory of the postmark's function, but cautioning that their ideas are inconclusive and not based on any certain evidence.

In their handbook, The Postmarks of Great Britain and Ireland, Alcock and Holland propose the following: "The resemblance [of this postmark] to the "1844" English provincial series of numbered obliterations will be noticed at once. There is another variety with horizontal bars also forming an upright oval. These numbered "T.O." stamps probably belong to the group which Hendy says were impressed at the inland section of the London G.P.O. on letters sent to the Traveling Post Offices which could not be included in the regular mail bags, owing to the late hour at which they were posted." The word to focus on here is "probably." The connection of this postmark with the TPO based upon the "TO" has since fallen out of favor.

In H.C. Westley's detailed study, The Postal Cancellations of London 1840-1890, the postmark is placed in the chapter on the Foreign Branch cancellations. He explains: "On 30 April 1860, six stamps were issued showing T.O.1 to T.O.6. These are frequently found on W.H. Smith & Son's wrappers.

A Journal article proposed that the postmarks "were issued on 30 April 1860 for use in the Foreign Branch of the Circulation Department at St. Martin's le Grand. They were possibly used for ship or naval letters, or both, passing through the Circulation Department. All Royal Navy letters went to St. Martin's le Grand for redirection."

Wrappers: Many of the examples of these postmarks appear on stationery. Most examples exist on wrapper cut squares with W.H. Smith & Sons advertisement collars. There are examples of "T.O.2" and "T.O.6" on the two pence embossed wrapper in blue with collars stating "W.H. Smith & Sons, 186, Strand, London." For obvious reasons, a great many of the wrappers are canceled with the "pre-cancels of Smith, Elder & Co., Henry S. King & Co., and William Dawson & Sons. The fact that they appear with some regularity on the wrappers along with the pre-cancels would lead one to the possible idea that they were used somehow as a substitute pre-cancel for any of the above firms or perhaps for a firm, which remains unrecorded. The pre-cancels are shown below:

Even before the end of the war, the French announced plans for a federation of Indochina within the French Union, with greater self-government for the various states. The federation was accepted in Cambodia and Laos. Vietnamese nationalists, however, demanded (1945) the complete independence of Annam, Tonkin, and Cochin China as Vietnam, and after Dec., 1946, these regions were plunged into bitter fighting between the French and the extreme nationalists, often times led by Communists. The war in Vietnam dragged on for years, culminating in the French defeat at Dienbienphu. The Geneva Conference in 1954 effectively ended French control of Indochina.
